 - ii. 12-23-2015 Police Support-Quality Inn Incident

- I. Couple of issues were brought up about this incident. Bathke was concerned with our safety and positioning, we should have been set up differently and maybe using the body armor we were given from the police dept. We will look into getting newer from the police dept. as they replace theirs. Baker didn't like/understand the call out for SAR to go the police station. This has procedure has been changed, EM Bathke and DEM Jenniges are now part of the ERU and will dispatch SAR and have more knowledge of what we are called out for. DCI was unhappy during the debriefing that there was not a unified radio channel used. SAR has the resources and should have been used. The MEOC should have been on-site to aid with this.
1. New business requiring a vote:
 - a. Additions to the team.
 - b. Additions to the dive team.
 - I. Jenniges, Baker, Schiefen, and Waddell gave measurements to become part of dive team.

What is an El Niño?

El Niño is characterized by unusually warm ocean temperatures in the Equatorial Pacific, as opposed to La Niña, which characterized by unusually cold ocean temperatures in the Equatorial Pacific. El Niño is an oscillation of the ocean-atmosphere system in the tropical Pacific having important consequences for weather around the globe.

Among these consequences are increased rainfall across the southern tier of the US and in Peru, which has caused destructive flooding, and drought in the West Pacific, sometimes associated with devastating brush fires in Australia. Observations of conditions in the tropical Pacific are considered essential for the prediction of short term (a few months to 1 year) climate variations.

NOTE: Until 1997, the 1982-1983 El Niño, was the largest El Niño of the twentieth century.

In normal, non-El Niño conditions, the trade winds blow towards the west across the tropical Pacific. These winds pile up warm surface water in the west Pacific, so that the sea surface is about 1/2 meter higher at Indonesia than at Ecuador.

El Niños, with water warmer than usual (red) in the eastern Pacific, during in 1986-1987, 1991-1992, 1993, 1994 and 1997-1998. 1997-1998 is a very strong El Niño.

Typical El Niño Winter Pattern

The image above shows the typical pattern in the winter during El Niño events. The polar jet stream tends to stay to the north of the Missouri Basin region, while the Pacific jet stream remains across the southern U.S. With the Missouri Basin isolated between the storm tracks, warmer and possibly drier conditions can develop during El Niño events.

El Niño in Winter

An El Niño develops when sea surface temperatures are warmer than average in the equatorial Pacific for an extended period of time. This is important to North America because El Niño has an impact on our weather patterns, most predominantly in the winter.

Although each El Niño is different, there are some general patterns that are predictable. For instance, the polar jet stream is typically farther north than usual, while the Pacific jet stream remains across the southern United States (see figure to left).

This pattern brings above-normal temperatures to much of the Missouri River Basin region, particularly across the northern tier of the basin. Keep in mind that this does not mean that cold weather will not happen this winter. Extreme cold weather may be milder and less frequent, however.

Snowpack can also be impacted by the typical El Niño winter pattern as well. Snowpack in the northern Rockies and Plains can be reduced and heavy snow events may be less frequent.

El Niño Outlook

Winter Temperature and Precipitation Outlooks

Valid for December 2015 - February 2016

As of August, the winter outlooks for the region show that below-normal precipitation is favored for the headwaters of the Missouri River, while above-normal precipitation is favored for areas of the southern Rockies. This could have implications for many sectors, in both positive ways (increased snowpack to the south could be welcomed by ski resorts) and negative ways (reduced snowpack to the north could impact spring runoff). Meanwhile, the temperature outlook indicates that central and northern areas of the region could have above-normal temperatures, while some southern areas could have below-normal temperatures.

The seasonal outlooks above combine many factors including dynamical models, the effects of long-term trends, soil moisture, and the El Niño Southern Oscillation cycle (ENSO). Because these outlooks combine many inputs, they do not match the typical El Niño conditions exactly. To learn more about these outlooks, or to retrieve the latest temperature, precipitation, and drought outlooks, please visit the Climate Prediction Center at: <http://www.cpc.ncep.noaa.gov>

El Niño Strength

Winter 2015-16

Potential Intensity, Winter 2015-16

Model data courtesy of the Climate Prediction Center and the International Research Institute for Climate and Society.

El Niño conditions have continued this summer and forecasts indicate that this El Niño will strengthen, peaking as a strong event in late fall or early winter. According to the Climate Prediction Center, there is a greater than 90% chance that these conditions will last through the winter and about an 85% chance that El Niño will continue into the early spring. Research has shown that strong El Niños are often followed by La Niñas, so conditions should continue to be monitored closely, especially if the El Niño weakens next spring, as predicted.

Potential Winter and Spring Impacts

Missouri River

The Missouri River at Gavins Point, South Dakota. Image courtesy of Natalie Umphlett.

The wet spring resulted in higher than normal river levels in the lower Basin, but with weather conditions in the upper Basin switching from wet to dry to wet again, 2015 runoff above Sioux City, Iowa is expected to be near average at about 25 million acre feet. The Missouri River Mainstem Reservoir System will begin the 2016 runoff season at the base of the Annual Flood Control and Multiple Use Zone, which means that all flood control storage will be available. Some indicators suggest a tilt toward lower than normal mountain snowpack in the upper Basin during a moderate to strong El Niño. Mountain and Plains snowpack will be closely monitored.

Agriculture

Wheat damaged by cold weather in Kansas - 2014. Image courtesy of Mary Knapp.

El Niño has worldwide impacts to the agricultural sector, and in the Missouri Basin region, there could be mixed impacts. Because El Niño winters typically result in a reduced snowpack in the northern Plains, this could expose winter wheat to harsh temperatures and wind, and also lead to soil moisture concerns. In southern areas, however, good soil moisture conditions could be expected where above-normal precipitation may occur. Additionally, warmer conditions in the northern tier of the basin could be beneficial for livestock producers both in terms of greater gains due to less severe cold weather and for calving in the later winter and spring.

Ecosystems

An iconic animal of the Great Plains - the bison. Image courtesy of Natalie Umphlett.

For northern areas of the Missouri Basin region, higher temperatures combined with a lower snowpack could be a recipe for increased fire danger this winter and spring. These conditions could also result in earlier peak stream flows; reduced runoff into wetlands, streams, and rivers in the spring; reduced spring vegetation growth (depending on spring precipitation); and generally warmer stream temperatures. Any reduction to spring runoff or vegetation growth could have negative impacts to wildlife, however these impacts may not be apparent until later in the spring or summer and will be dependent on springtime precipitation.

Comparisons and Limitations

Winter Conditions During Past El Niños

Departure from mean temperature (left) and percent of mean precipitation (right) during the El Niño winter of 1997-98. Maps courtesy of the Midwestern Regional Climate Center.

The maps above illustrate the winter conditions of the record breaking El Niño of 1997-98. Much of the basin was warmer than average. Precipitation signals varied across the basin, but the mountain snowpack peaked near normal. While the current El Niño is on track to be one of the strongest on record, please note that each El Niño is different. Other factors can be considered such as antecedent conditions or the Arctic Oscillation, which trumped the El Niño during the winter of 2009-10. Right now, there is a warm pool of water off the Pacific Northwest coast that should be monitored, although it does not seem likely to affect the current El Niño at this time.

While past El Niño events can help inform forecasters about certain conditions, there are some limitations. For instance, in the Missouri Basin region, El Niño is not known to impact:

- Potential for ice storms or blizzards.
- First freeze in the fall (early or late).
- Track or intensity of any single weather system.
- Last freeze in the spring (early or late).

SOUTH DAKOTA

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

prevention ~ protection ~ enforcement

South Dakota Department of Public Safety (SDDPS)
Advanced Notification of State Office Closures Due to Inclement Weather
Internal Procedures

When a winter weather system such as a blizzard is forecasted to affect South Dakota, the South Dakota Office of Emergency Management (SDOEM) will coordinate information and response actions as necessary according to the Winter Storm Incident Annex of the State Emergency Operations Plan. SDOEM will monitor the National Weather Service forecast and, if necessary, request a forecast package from the National Weather Service for purposes of state office closures. The forecast will be disseminated to state response partners and policy makers including the State Office Closure Team.

SDDPS and DOT staff will assess the forecast package and expected travel conditions. If either agency believes the closure of state offices may be prudent, DPS will initiate an 8:00 PM CT conference call with the State Office Closure Team. At the conference call, SDDPS and DOT will brief the Team on the following conditions and make an action recommendation:

- Highway Patrol and SDDOT field reports
- National Weather Service forecast and analysis
- Local government actions (school closures, city/county government closures, etc.)

The State Office Closure Team will, in coordination with the Cabinet officials when appropriate, make one of four recommendations to the Governor: close one or more offices, delay the start time of one or more offices, decline to close any offices, or defer action until 6 AM CT the next morning. Cabinet members will be notified of any action or non-action taken, ideally by 9:00 PM CT or 6:30 AM CT respectively.

For counties impacted in Eastern South Dakota the decision to close offices will ideally be made by 6:30 AM CT. For counties impacted in Western South Dakota the decision to close offices will ideally be made by 6:30 AM MT. This will ensure the most accurate information is available from SDDPS and SDDOT. If counties in both the Central and Western time zones are impacted it may be necessary for the Team to discuss office closures on two separate AM calls in order to make the best recommendation for those areas. If a decision is made to close any state office, a press release will be developed by DPS/DOT.

The closure recommendation and conditions will be re-evaluated as SDDOT begins deploying at 5 AM the next morning for winter maintenance operations.

The recommendations cycle will begin again at either 6 AM CT if recommended or 8:00 PM the next evening and will continue as necessary.

Notification procedures will follow the Bureau of Human Resources Emergency Office Closing Policy.

State Office Closure Team

The State Office Closure Team is selected by the Governor. Its current membership includes:

- Director of Policy & Operations Nathan Sanderson (chair)
- BHR Commissioner Laurie Gill,
- DOT Secretary Darin Bergquist,
- DPS Secretary Trevor Jones, and
- Policy Advisor Liza Clark.

Membership accurate as of May 27, 2015.

INWS Alert Sign Up

By Todd H. Heitkamp, SDOEM Deputy Director

Numerous county emergency managers have stated they like getting the weather alert information from SDOEM, whereas some EM's have requested our office not send weather alert information when there are impending storms within the state. Just prior to the SDEMA conference, SDOEM visited with Todd Heitkamp, NWS, and determined the easiest way to achieve common ground would be for each EM to sign up for the alerts they wanted to see. Todd briefly touched on this at the conference. Below is more information so you can sign up for applicable alerts. SDOEM will no longer forward alerts received.

Additional information from Todd H., NWS:

INWS is a National Weather Service program that was developed a few years ago and has gained popularity. Many of the people that already use the service highly recommend it! You are able to customize how you want to receive the warning through your phone, via a text or email, or through your computer. INWS offers many options that you can tailor yourself. At this time, the service is only available to government officials, but hopefully will be expanded in the future.
